

Table of Contents

Map of Poland's Post-war Border Changes	9
Map of Poland's Baltic 'Recovered Territories', Border Changes and Administrative Boundaries, 1939-50	9
Introduction	11
Chapter One: Compromise and Conflict in Poland's Baltic 'Recovered Territories', 1945
Allied discussions regarding Poland's post-war borders	31
The first Polish settlers arrive in the Oder-Neisse lands – February and March 1945	35
Further Plans for 'Degermanisation' and 'Repolonisation'	39
Problems Arise between Polish Settlers and the Red Army	41
Unforeseen Complications of Uncontrolled 'Degermanisation'	50
The Potsdam Conference and the Oder-Neisse Lands	54
Conflict and Compromise among Polish Settlers, Germans and Indigenous 'Poles'	60
The Roman Catholic Church and Polish-Soviet difficulties	63
Polish settlement and 'degermanisation' stepped up	70
'Degermanisation,' depopulation and organised transports	74
The growth of the regime's control of the Baltic provinces	78
Chapter Two: 1946: the Year of Expulsion and Settlement
Main issues of the time period	85
Organised 'transports' of Germans continue	87
Local issues and the appearance of the armed underground	90
The expulsions and international developments	94
The increasing momentum of the expulsions and the PSL threat	100
The armed underground attempts to destabilise the 'Three Times "Yes"' referendum	108
Polish settlement and the political fallout from the referendum	112
Jewish affairs and Polish settlement in summer 1946	115
The fallout from Secretary Byrnes' speech	119
Upcoming elections and the decline of the armed underground	122
Conclusion	129

Chapter Three: Open Conflict: 1947-1948
Main issues of the time period	131
Electoral fraud and the decline of the political opposition – January-April 1947	138
Increasing communist economic and political control – April-December 1947	149
Division points to ‘unification’ – January-August 1948	159
The impact of Gomulka’s fall in the Baltic provinces – August-December 1948	167
Conclusion	174
Chapter Four: Conflict Intensifies, 1949-1953
Main issues of the time period	177
Attempts to sovietise youth and peasants prove difficult – January-December 1949	180
Problems with the clergy and collectivisation – January-December 1950	189
The unexpected impact of the ‘Gryfice incident’ – January-December 1951	194
The failure of collectivisation becomes apparent – January-December 1952	204
The impact of Stalin’s death and the Berlin Uprising – January-December 1953	212
Conclusion	220
Chapter Five: Conflict Gives Way to Compromise, 1954-1956
The communists’ illusory hold on power	223
Party activists feel increasing pressure – January-December 1954	224
The Party engages in ‘self-criticism’ – January-December 1955	232
The period of shock upon shock – January-October 1956	241
The Polish October and its fallout in the Baltic Recovered Territories – October-December 1956	251
Conclusion	256
Conclusion	259
Bibliography	265
Acknowledgements	279